The Curling Letters of the Zulu War
'There was Awful Slaughter'

Edited by Dr Adrian Greaves and Brian Best

The crushing defeat suffered by the British Army by the Zulus at Isandlwana on 22 January 1879 is by any standards a gripping and shocking story. The discovery of a complete set of diaries written by a young Royal Artillery officer who was the only survivor of his unit which lost all their guns is a very important find.

Not only does this superb record tell of the dramatic events of that fateful day but it captures the atmosphere of the whole campaign and the age in which it was fought, and makes for compulsive reading. This is a rare personal insight into the historic battle of Isandlwana, the single greatest military disaster in British Colonial history.

The Curling Letters of the Zulu War are completely authentic diaries, with linking narrative and background notes written by the leading members of the Anglo Zulu War Historical Society. A foreword by David Rattray, the renowned Zulu War expert.
